A: There are many tools to convert between RINEX format files (if you use GPS hardware). R-2--Z is a utility to convert to RINEX format, R-2h is for converting RINEX h file to RINEX format,and rrin is a command-line only utility to convert between RINEX files and RINEX variables. See this topic for more informations: Rinex2Rinex: How to convert RINEX 3.00 to RINEX 3.01 to RINEX 2.10 A: Partial answer to this question depends on what you want to do with the RINEX file. If it's just to store the GPS information, you can use the RINEX file extension to extract data. If it's for some post-processing software, you'll need to convert the data. For that you can use JPS2RIN or PPS, etc. As for the hardware, any GPS unit that outputs RINEX format data can be used to input data. The only issue comes from the fact that the GPS units aren't as smart as what we would want them to be. GPS units tend to perform better with some satellites more than others. But, provided that they are configured properly, the GPS data is already in the RINEX format, so you just need to open it with your software of choice. While the district court correctly noted the helpfulness of the factual information that would be revealed by psychiatric examination in determining Tompkins's claim of ineffective assistance, it did not adequately consider whether information gained through a psychiatric examination would be admissible at the state habeas hearing. Consequently, the record is not sufficiently developed on the issue of whether an evidentiary hearing is warranted. Cf. Enomoto v. Bagley, 496 F.2d 337, 336 (6th Cir.1974) (holding that habeas petitioner was not entitled to evidentiary hearing where evidence 3da54e8ca3
